What is skills-based volunteering?

Skills-based volunteering allows professionals to support our charity on a pro bono basis.

What makes skills-based volunteering different and important is that when it works, it knits together the expertise and resources from the business and the charity to create strengthened sustainable solutions that don't come undone when the business and charity parts ways.

Some of the reasons why you should volunteer your skills for The Lewis Foundation.

Make a difference to the lives of others.

Help boost our capacity, which means we can help support even more people going through cancer treatment.

Feel valued and a part of our team.

Get to know your local community.

Use your skills to help support our work and develop new ones in the process.

Meet new people and expand your network.

RECENT EXAMPLE OF EFFECTIVE SKILLS BASED VOLUNTEERING

THE OUTLOOK CREATIVE GROUP DESIGNED US A CHARITY WEBSITE

The Outlook team, which included Abigail Dawes, Manita Gosai and Jason Farmer, supported us with the design and build of our new website. Our new digital presence reflects the growth that we have achieved over the last few years.

We wanted to have a website which showed our audience the level of professionalism we have attained and make improvements to the layout, functionality, and user experience to better reflect the much larger audience our charity is now working with.

Jason Farmer, Digital Director at Outlook, commented, "It was a pleasure to support Lorraine and Lee with the redesign of the site. They provide such a great service to those unfortunate enough to find themselves in hospital, especially during the COVID pandemic, when the support packs were and continue to be invaluable and provide some much-needed comfort to those who need it most. We are very proud to have helped, and I know I speak for the team who were delighted to be able to help in any way we could for such a great cause."
